Japanese parasols are very fashionable. The Yeddo shade is flat and made in about sixteen pieces; it is lined, but the lining is against the outside, so that the frame shows. The mount ing is very elegant when made of gilded steel, and produces a very good effect. The handle is short and thick. Sometimes there is a bouquet on the ring which closes the shade, and sometimes there is one on a gore of the shade on the inside is painted a Japanese figure with

For evening wear, as well as for bonnets, large flowers are the style. Marshmallows in many shades are arranged in large bunches and placed on different parts of the skirts and in the hair. Very large pansies are also used, their purple and yellow unts corresponding well with the fashionable colors-gold and heliotrope. Skirts are sail drawn as much back as ever.

Very small puffings are over the hips and rather larger ones are in the back, on the lower part of the skirt and bust. All walking dresses are short or just clear the ground. Petticoats are trimmed with pleated flounces, which are not starahed; even those on the trains for evening dresses are left unstiffened. Small lace caps with beads, intermixed or wholy covered with jet, are worn more than ever. Lest year they consisted of a plain collar made of beads; they are now a kind of talle garment completely covered with jet work and friege. This is a convenient and becoming style, and can be worn with the plainest waists. Belts for the front of basques are so broad that when they are meant to be smooth and straight they are stiffened by whalebones and are organiented with two rows of buttons five io cach row. Nevertheless the soft sish belts. with tasseled ends and carelessly tied, are more popular.

Those who have the old time shoulder capes of embroidered muslin, worn by mothers or grandmothers, may deem themselves fortueate, as their exact counterparts are now produced as among the summer novelties.

AN ASTONISHING BABY .- A San Francisco reporter, finding a mild and peaceful looking section of Twentieth street, which, entirely out of the line and influence of its fellows, seemed less incendiary in character, knocked at the right number, and was admitted to the view of the smallest sample of the genus home he ever beheld. It was lost at the time in a set of ordipary baby clothes, the mother, a delicate lock ing woman of eighteen, finding it in a rather large wrinkle of the flancel. It was twelve days of age and named Albert, wheree the reporter gathered that it was a boy. Though perfectly formed, as babies go, it was all head, like a prarie dog, and the head was the tipies; and pretriest little head that ever mother smiled over. The eyes were large enough to be decidedly blue, the pose was as different from the usual plebeian wart which bubies affect as could be imagined, being well defined, and the little mouth resembled closely a properly planted bullet hole from a twenty two revolver. A fine head of hair defined the little grape shot cranium, and a plentitude of wrinkles all over the forehead gave an appearance of gravity and knowledge of the world to the new citizen far beyond its days. The proud little mother asked the reporter if he would like to see its tootsywootseys, and being politely informed that if there was anything a reporter did like it was tootsy wootseys, raised several acres of drapery and exhibited two tiny feet, but nothing of the tootsy variety.

They were so small that both occupied with ease an ordinary baby shoe, and each demanded a doll's pedal germent for a nest fit. The hands, though completely finished with finger nails, looked precisely like those of a baby monkey in size. The reporter observed that Albert had no teeth, and could not talk with any great degree of intelligibility, though the mother appeared unconscious of these defects, saying that both testh and talk would come in time. When born, it weighed about twelve ources avoirdupois, Three days af erward, after it had much increased in size, it we ghed one pound.

The father and mother are Mr. and Mrs. William Sangey. Tae father is a painter by trade and a young man, an thinks just as highly, if not more so, one son as if he weighed fifty pounds. Albert at present is lively when awake and very hungry and very sleepy, in general, these being the only prominent qualities of his temperament as vet.
